Report of the Investment Manager

The first six months of the year were characterized by a two-sided market picture. Optimism surrounding falling inflation and expectations of interest-rate cuts weighed against geopolitical tensions and challenging economic outlooks in parts of the world.

In the first quarter, equity markets initially rose before ending the quarter generally weak. Markets were primarily defined by volatility and uncertainty, largely because the U.S. administration adopted previously unseen methods of diplomacy. By being unorthodox and unconventional—such as announcing tariffs unexpectedly—uncertainty occurred on many fronts. For example, several companies chose not to provide financial guidance for the remainder of the year, which further increased uncertainty.

In the second quarter, markets were initially dominated by uncertainty and volatility. As the U.S. administration announced a “Liberation Day,” plans for extensive tariffs were communicated. These statements led to sharp swings in global stock markets for a time. Trade tariffs were perhaps one of the most frequent topics in news reporting. Towards the end of the quarter, geopolitical tensions appeared to subside. The U.S. dollar continued to weaken, and expectations of future interest-rate cuts became stronger. Economic signals generally surprised on the upside. Positive inflation data from the U.S. were also released, strengthening expectations of an upcoming rate cut from the Federal Reserve later in the year. Most major central banks cut their key interest rates. The U.S. dollar continued to weaken, by the end of the quarter it had lost over 11 % against the euro. Many corporate earnings reports—especially in tech—surprised on the upside.

For us as long-term value investors, the period has confirmed the importance of adhering to a disciplined investment philosophy—focusing on companies with long-term competitive advantages and good profitability. With high probability, we may continue to experience geopolitical tensions during the second half of the year, as ongoing conflicts seem far from resolution. I have great confidence that the underlying companies in the portfolios will continue to perform exceptionally and I am convinced that 2025 will be another successful year for the fund.
